After this he removed to Campden Hill, Kensington, where he constructed an observatory, to which he devoted the closest attention during the remainder of his life, and which achieved a European fame. He was one of the founders of the Royal Astronomical Society, and was for a time its president. In 1830, on the recommendation of the duke of Wellington, who was then prime minister, he received the honour of knighthood, and for several years before his death he enjoyed a pension of. 300 a year on the civil list, for his contributions to astronomical science. The account of Sir James Souths astronomical observations during his residence in Southwark is published in the Philosophical Transactions for 1825, and is accompanied by an interesting description of the fivefoot and seven-foot equatorials with which they were made. Sir James died 19 Oct. , 1867. SOUTH, Robert, D....
