Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1915 edition. Excerpt: . . . in a campaign against the French, his great soul sent these words to the Governor: Let me serve voluntarily, then I will with the greatest pleasure in life devote my service to the expedition without any other reward than the satisfaction of serving my country, but to be slaving dangerously for the shadow of pay, through woods, rocks, mountains, I would rather prefer the great toil of daily labor than to serve on such ignoble terms. One is reminded of the words of Anselm, the Churchman, to William the Conqueror: Let me be free and all that I have belongs to you, make me a slave and you shall have neither me nor mine. Here was the great American speaking his soul in accents noble while yet a youth. Here were intimations of the dream he had for his country; here tokens of his willingness to build his life therein. We are all mindful of those who claim that Washington was not an American, that at heart he was more a Royalist than a Republican; more a representative of the aristocracy of the court than of the democracy of the plains. His life was one of growth and unfolding, as all great lives are; ideas-coming to maturity, the daybreak fulfilling itself in the noontide; but to say that the Washington of Revolutionary days and the years following was not an American is to belie facts so plain that he who runs may read. To...
