Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Presidential Election A change of administration was now loudly called for; and Mr. Jefferson assumed the helm amidst the lengthened plaudits of a nation of republicans. The mind of this great man was very early imbued with the spirit of the age - which, in his turn, he has enlightened and advanced. At thirty four lie gave us the immortal Declaration of Independence; and his intermediate services alone, at home and abroad, would have been sufficient to point him out to the gratitude of a virtuous and intelligent people. To him, therefore, it pre-eminently belonged to heal the wounds our free institutions had sustained, and to re-assure the suffering nations of the world of the great political truth, first demonstrated in America - that the people are capable of self-government. - At the end of his second term, he too, like the father of his country, gladly withdrew to the bosom of philosophical retirement. Mr. Madison followed. This accomplished statesman had also long rendered himself a signal benefactor of the country that rewarded him with...
